Kinross Nevada Makes its Debut in the Nevada Day Parade

For the first time in the history of the Carson City Nevada Day Parade, mining families represented Nevada mining on a Kinross Nevada float that a team of RMGC people designed and built. Read more on pages 2-4.

Mining Families Participate in Nevada Day Parade

Parade Float Construction

Nevada became the 36th state in the United States of America on October 31, 1864. Since then, Nevada has celebrated Nevada Day to remind its citizens of its history and how and when it became a state. In Nevada's capitol city, Carson City, a parade has been held on Nevada Day since 1938. The three-mile route is attended by 40,000 people each year and lasts a few hours.

Long-time parade attendee and RMGC safety supervisor Robert Flynn was watching the 2021 Nevada Day Parade and thought it would be a great way for Kinross to let people know about mining opportunities in the Silver State. "The parade is something I try to go to every year. While there last year I thought, What a great way to get our name out there and let people know about what we do," said Robert. A short time later Robert pitched the idea to Nicole Silberschlag, Safety Superintendent who thought the idea was a great one. Once approved, the plans were in the works for a Kinross Nevada float in the 2022 Nevada Day Parade.

Each year the Nevada Day Parade has a theme. This year's theme was "Carnival on the Comstock." The Comstock refers to the first discover of silver in the US back in 1859 in the vicinity of Virginia City. Named for American miner Henry Comstock who made the discovery, the Comstock Lode gave Nevada its notoriety as a mining state. Fast forward 163 years and mining is one of Nevada's top industries.

This history of riches and mother lodes is what the Nevada Day celebrations are all about. Robert and his team of designers and builders wanted to reflect Nevada's rich mining history along with modern day mining in their parade float. "We wanted the float to take us back in history," said Robert. The initial design ideas came from the collaboration of Robert, Caleb Trease, and Nicole Silberschlag. The team reached out to the Tonopah Mining Museum to borrow some old mining artifacts. The museum was instantly on board and plans were made to use an ore cart that was originally donated by RMGC, a jack-leg drill, along with old mining hard hats and lanterns.

Once the design concept was in motion, next came the construction of the float trailer. For safety reasons, float specifications require special framework built. The build was done in two phases. The initial build team was Robert Flynn, Caleb Trease, John Burton, Nicole Peters, Heike Martin, Blanca Spivey, Cindy Sims, Mike Peterson, Tony Philips, Nicole Silberschlag and Darrell McMillan. The float was dismantled and hauled to Carson City in two loads. The second build and on-site assembly team consisted of Robert, Caleb Trease, Bobby Murray and family, Heike Martin, Nicole Peters and John Burton.

Along with the mining artifacts, the float was equipped with a 3,500 pound boulder. Maria Penson of Ore Processing assisted with this part of the project. Once the float was assembled in Carson City, banners were hung around the float to cover the construction materials. The banners, (continue on page 4)

Community Outreach Through Nevada Day Parade

As we all know, mining would be nothing without the people who live and work in the mining communities. RMGC employees and their families, in Kinross t-shirts designed and ordered by Jessica Kiburis, were invited to ride and walk in the parade. Around 20 kids and ten adults dressed in donkey and prospector costumes were on the float. "We wanted the float to represent historical mining with the old equipment and the costumes, but also show modern mining families," said Robert. Sam Faga wrote the narrative that was broadcasted three times throughout the parade route.

In addition to the parade float, Kinross set up a vendor booth at the Nevada Day event. Trent and Sara Sweeney set up the booth with Kinross goodies. Trent manned the booth which served as a recruitment site along with an outreach opportunity. A big thank you to Cashman for donating a three die cut replicas of CAT equipment. The die cut models were used as raffle items at the booth.

All in all, the first float entry in the Nevada Day Parade in Carson City was very successful. In addition to this being Kinross's first year, the Kinross float was the only mining float in the parade, making this an even more important event to include in plans for future years. People in mining communities know how beneficial the mining industry is to our state; now we must spread that word to urban areas of Nevada.

We were really honored and thankful to be invited to participate in the parade. The kids and I were so excited and had the best time! Several people in the crowd told me how fun it was to get a gold coin from the gold mine.
